Beazer Homes breaks ground on new development in City of Goose Creek

January 22, 2025

Charleston, S.C. – Beazer Homes has broken ground on its latest development in the City of Goose Creek, S.C. The community, Avalon Point, will produce 142 new U.S. Department of Energy certified Zero Energy Ready Homes™. This development will feature both townhomes and single-family homes.

The groundbreaking ceremony was attended by key officials from the City of Goose Creek and representatives from Beazer Homes, including Charleston Division President Greg Coffey. “It is important for us to thank the city officials that make this project possible,” said Coffey. “With their partnership, we are extending access to the most energy-efficient homes Beazer builds to current and future residents of the Red Bank District.”

Mayor of Goose Creek Greg Habib stated, “We appreciate Beazer Homes’ partnership in the continued development of the Red Bank Road corridor. We believe this project enhances the area, and will lead to further commercial growth to help create the Red Bank District our residents want.”

The new community is designed to provide a modern living experience with a focus on energy efficiency and sustainability. The homes at Avalon Point will surpass industry standards, going beyond all local construction and energy codes. The community layout and concept amenities were unveiled during the ceremony, showcasing the future development's commitment to quality and innovation.
